Re: U.S. Postal Service Waiver Request, Docket RM2021-5

Dear Chairman Kubayanda,

Our Company, National Presort, LP ("NPI"), designs and manufactures letters and flats sortation equipment used by presort companies who are partnered with the USPS based on established workshare discounts. Our business is highly dependent on the ability of our customers to receive the true value reflected by the cost avoidance to the USPS for the work they perform. Their ability to understand these discounts and the process therein is critical to their ability to both plan and invest in their infrastructure to be as efficient as possible. This in turn ensures companies like NPI has a viable customer base.

NPI opposes the Postal Service's March 26, 2021 waiver request to delay improvements to the workshare discount for First Class Mail sorted to the 5-Digit level. Specifically, the Postal Service seeks to maintain the current 5-Digit workshare discount, rather than increase the discount to move it closer to a rate that reflects the full value of the work performed by companies like our customers, the Presort Companies in the United States. The Commission should deny the waiver request.

When the Commission adopted its final rules that included the changes to how the USPS sets workshare discounts, it did so because even though the Commission had been recommending for years that the USPS better use its existing pricing flexibility to encourage more efficient mail preparation and entry behaviors by setting workshare discounts as close as practicable to their avoided costs, the USPS had not done so. Accordingly, the Commission established the new rules around how the USPS sets workshare discounts to better comport with the principles of Efficient Component Pricing. Nothing has changed that would impact the Commission's rationale when it developed these rules.

In addition, the Commission included requirements the Postal Service would need to meet if requesting a waiver to the workshare rules. Those requirements included extensive evidence and detailed rationale to support the USPS' request for waiver. The Commission said it intended for the waiver process to be used in exceptional circumstances, and that it intended to ensure the Postal Service's strict adherence to the new waiver rules and requirements. The Postal Service in submitting this waiver request has not met the requirements laid out by the Commission nor has it adhered to the waiver rules. We believe that how the Commission responds to this first waiver request under a new process will set the precedent for future waiver requests, therefore it is essential that the process be followed as the Commission designed it.

In the USPS' waiver request, it noted that it plans to focus this year on the impact of the first above-CPI price change in many years, which it plans to file for on May 28, 2021. We can only conclude that the Postal Service plans to increase prices for a second time in 2021, and for a significant increase. For businesses like ours [and those of our customers and their customers] who are still facing the impacts from the pandemic, such a price increase could not come at a worse time. One of the ways our customer's businesses bring value to mail users and to the Postal Service is by presorting their customer's mail, which gives their customers access to lower postage rates than they would otherwise qualify for. Improving the workshare discount would help offset the impact of these anticipated price increases for those customers while also encouraging and continuing the most efficient mail preparation and entry.

Mail is of critical importance to our business, and the work we do adds value to mail in many ways. We provide software that directly allows the presorting and barcoding of mail in the most efficient manner possible. The intelligent data our Presort customers provide to the Postal Service is the foundation for a long list of initiatives it uses to reduce costs, improve service, and grow mail usage. Our Presort customer's employees act as a front-line sales force for the Postal Service, selling its products and services to their customers. They also provide ongoing customer training and education on postal programs. Collectively, all of our work is supported by workshare discounts that are set in keeping with the direction the Commission's rules establish. Approving the USPS' waiver request would negatively impact our ability to continue bringing value to mail and mail users.

Thank you for your consideration of these comments.
